DIVERSIFIED INDUSTRIES.

They Are Desirable for Many Reasons Both Economic and Patriotic.

There are two reasons why diversified industries are of advantage. The first is purely economic, the second is national and patriotic. We believe that diversified industries are an economic benefit to the country, because every man should have the opportunity to choose the field in which to exercise his faculties and talents, to earn his own living in the most congenial way. Only when this opportunity is present will national wealth be greatest and the compensation of labor be highest. When there are but few industries, and all the inhabitants of a country have to work in those few, wages cannot be high, nor can the maximum result in production be attained.

Workingmen are not machines; they are human beings, with all the complex motives, sentiments and aspirations that form the grandest part of human character. They can and will do more work when they like that work and their heart is in it than when they drudge along in an occupation into which necessity has forced them and which is ungenial and distasteful. It is because free traders have entirely neglected to consider this aspect of the question that they have failed to realize the importance of diversified industries.

Looking at laborers more than anything else as mechanisms that are to be worked in some particular industry for which, as they arbitrarily state, the country is best fitted, they quite lose sight of the fact that the primary factors governing production and wages are the ambitions and talents of the men and women who work. Unless industries are diversified, too, there cannot be that steady and active demand for labor without which high wages are impossible. Every industry has its periods of prosperity and depression, alternating periods of steady and unsteady demand for labor, of high and low wages. Now, when a country is limited to one field or occupation, such a period of depression undermines the industrial system of the whole country, throws numbers out of work, reduces wages all around and produces hard times, from which it may take years to recover. On the other hand, when industries are diversified, while great depression in one undoubtedly influences all, yet the demand for labor is not so greatly impaired, nor does it require so much time for conditions to again become normal. Professor Denlow, in his "Economic Philosophy," expresses this idea as follows:

"High wages are due to such an organization of industries as keeps the whole people employed, and to attain the greatest possible diversity we must not only tolerate those which we cannot avoid having, but we must insist on having those which, at the outset, free foreign competition would be both interested and able to destroy. And we must do this thoroughly in order to multiply the fields of employment for labor, and keep wages at the maximum, so far as human legislative effort can."

The other reason why we desire diversified industries is one which should appeal with force to every patriotic citizen. The spectacle of a nation with many industries, with all its resources fully developed, with all the natural wealth with which it has been blessed utilized, is surely far more inspiring, far more calculated to rouse the pride of the patriot, than that of a country devoted to the exploitation of a single industry, with but one field for development, with but one object of endeavor. We wish to see our country supreme in every field not closed to her by nature; in the factory as in the farm, in the forest as in the mine. For the same reason that we love to behold a well developed human being, a man of good proportions, rather than one who is stunted and badly formed, so as patriotic Americans we desire to see our country harmoniously developing in every line—a development which alone can make it truly national in character.

The Resource of Shallow Minds. This doctrine of unconstitutionality by which the Democrats seek to throw odium on protection has ever been resorted to by shallow minds in order to hide the poverty of their argument. Whenever in the past political or partisan expediency demanded the blocking of any legislation, it was asserted that that legislation was unconstitutional. By falling back as a last resort upon the claim of the unconstitutionality of protection, Democrats not only scorn the teachings of the fathers of their party, but they stultify themselves. The constitutionality of our national policy has long since been passed upon and affirmed by the nation's highest tribunal—the United States supreme court.

Since the new tariff became a law, Rio coffee has declined in price 24.3 per cent, and sugar 35.8 per cent. Dun's commercial agency reports the average fall in the necessities of life at 18 per cent. Dun's report would have been a good thing to incorporate into the Republican platform.

AN ENTERPRISING WOMAN. Kettle Falls to Have Milliner Parlors.

Yesterday afternoon a nicely dressed woman with an air of business about her might have been seen purchasing a ticket for Kettle Falls, Washington. It was Mrs. Alicia Sweeney who was starting for the new western city with a stock of trimmed hats. She stated that she had also bought a stock of goods of Corl, Knott & Co., which they will ship at once.

The lady stated that she knew all about the west, having lived in Colorado, and that she considered the prospects good for trade at Kettle Falls.

Register of Deeds A. L. Skinner Off for the West.

A. L. Skinner started for the west yesterday. He said to a representative of THE HERALD: "I shall visit in Montana, and shall also visit Kettle Falls, Washington, before my return. No, I don't care to say anything at present about my plans at Kettle Falls; wait until I come back."

The Grand Canon of the Colorado river, in Arizona, is now for the first time easily accessible to tourists. A regular stage line has been established from Flagstaff, Arizona, on the Atlantic & Pacific railroad, making the trip from Flagstaff to the most imposing part of the canon in less than twelve hours. The stage fare for the round trip is only $20, and meals and comfortable lodgings are provided throughout the trip at a reasonable price. The view of the Grand Canon afforded at the terminus of the stage route is the most stupendous panorama known in nature. There is also a trail at this point leading down the Canon wall, more than 6,000 feet vertically, to the river below. The descent of the trail is a grander experience than climbing the Alps, for in the bottom of this terrific and sublime chasm are hundreds of mountains greater than any of the Alpine range.

A book describing the trip to the Grand Canon, illustrated by many full-page engravings from special photographs, and furnishing all useful information, may be obtained free upon application to John J. Byrne, No. 723 Monmouth block, Chicago, Ill.
